DO

BODY ART Chicago Photography Center 3301 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-549-1631

Scope out some great ink without any awkward staring at the opening reception for photography exhibit "Tat-too II," which includes drinks from Half Acre Brewing Company and a performance from illusionists Movements of Magic. You can even come home with your own Sharpie tattoo. 7-9 p.m. Friday. GETTY IMAGES FILE

DO

BEAUTIFUL BRUNCH Edith Hart 1917 N. Damen Ave. 773-252-3350

Get a stylish start to the day at Babes & Bagels, a monthly benefit for the anti-bullying organization Kind Campaign, where you can score makeup tips and applications, shop new items and snack on bagels and champagne. Noon to 3 p.m. Sunday.

DRINK

FOWL PLAY Schubas 3159 N. Southport Ave. 773-525-2508 Frozen turkeys aren't just good for holiday dinners.

The Lakeview bar's second annual Turkey Bowl challenges players to use birds in place of balls to knock down pins set up in the parking lot while drinking $3 Schlitz, PBR and Old Style tallboy cans between turns. The winning team gets a Schlitz bag and bowling shirt and the chance to compete in the Wrigleyville Turkey Bowl Championship Feb. 2 at Murphy's Bleachers. Noon Saturday.

EAT

DINE DOWN SOUTH 25 Degrees 736 N. Clark St. 312-943-9700

Escape the Midwest cold at Southern Fried Sundays. The weekly $12 fried chicken dinner comes with two sides including mac and cheese, cornbread, collard greens or mashed potatoes. 5 p.m. Sunday.

PARTY FOOD Socca 3301 N. Clark St. 773-248-1155

Ordering hot wings isn't the only way to spice up the menu for foot-ball-watching. At the Super Bowl Cooking Class for Foodies, chef Roger Herring demonstrates how to whip up beer-cheese dip, rosemary-parmesan potato chips, BLT bread pudding and other snacks, serving samples along with wine and craft beers. $35. 11 a.m.-1 p.m. Saturday.

BORED GAME?

Hasbro rolls the dice on a new Monopoly game piece—What will it be? That's up to you

CNN
We all know the tokens of Monopoly: the shoe, top hat, wheelbarrow, clothes iron, battleship, race car, thimble and Scottie dog.

One of them is being forced into exile. Do not pass GO. Do not collect $200. Rather, go directly to jail.

Hasbro, maker of the board game available in 111 countries and 43 languages, is replacing one of the tokens with one "that's more representative of today's Monopoly players," according to Eric Nyman, senior vice president for Hasbro Gaming.

In a campaign replete with marketing genius and every cliché you can think of, Hasbro is encouraging fans of a special Facebook page to vote daily until Feb. 5 for the token they want to save and for the one they want added.

New choices are a diamond ring, guitar, toy robot, cat or helicopter.

The winning token will make its debut in mid- to late 2013. The classic token with the fewest votes will get the boot, which would be ironic if that turns out to be the shoe.

Thursday night, the leaderboard of old tokens at facebook.com/monopoly showed the Scottie to be the safest, followed by the race car.

Pity the wheelbarrow. It's looking for a miracle.

Did you know?
Monopoly was introduced by Parker Brothers in 1935 during the heart of the Great Depression. According to Hasbro, which bought the company, more than 1 billion people have played the game in its various versions. Some tokens are long gone, among them the lantern, cannon and rocking horse.

The truth about violent games

Ryan Smith

redeye@tribune.com
@ryansmithwriter

Video games have a Donkey Kong-sized image problem, and it's only gotten worse since last month's massacre in Newtown, Conn.

In the weeks following the Sandy Hook shooting, the NRA has blamed the "corrupting shadow industry" of games for contributing to a violent society. Vice President Joe Biden has made plans to meet with video game makers as part of his gun violence task force. A few towns or community groups have encouraged boycotts, burnings or buybacks of blood-soaked video games. And in suburban Algonquin, an arcade owner ditched a dozen gun-related games such as "Revolution X" and "Virtua Cop 2" because he said he doesn't want to be a part of the problem, nbcchicago.com reported.

Whoa. As a professional video game journalist, I'm here to set the record straight because I'm tired of cultural critics assuming modern video games that depict violence are all socially irresponsible bloodbaths that encourage murdering hookers or gunning down hordes of innocent bystanders for kicks.

The truth is this: Many of the best action games of 2012 present violence in a way that's more nuanced than you might think.

In the steampunk assassin game "Dishonored," you can shoot and kill everyone in your path, but the game encourages restraint. As your body count rises, the city visibly deteriorates and the rat population increases. You earn the best ending in the game by completely avoiding murder.

Jason Brody's transformation from average Joe to gun-toting badass in "Far Cry 3" is depicted as one with consequences. The game challenges the user with this question: By killing his thuggish enemies, is Jason becoming exactly like them?

"Spec Ops: The Line" retells the anti-war movie "Apocalypse Now" for the modern age. In it, U.S. Army Capt. Martin Walker goes on a rescue mission in a sandstorm-wrecked Dubai and discovers the ways that the horrors of war can affect your sanity and judgment.

Even in "Call of Duty: Black Ops II," the top-selling military shooter often targeted by anti-games groups, there's a theme running through the campaign about the generational effects of violence. The hidden motivation for the game's villain, a terrorist named Raul Menendez, is both the abuses of the United States-backed "contra" counter-insurgency in his home country of Nicaragua in the '60s and '70s and the murder of his sister by a rogue soldier in the U.S. military. Violence is shown to beget violence.

Of course, none of these games will ever be confused with "Sesame Street." There is death and destruction throughout, which is why they are all rated "M" for "Mature." It is entertainment created by adults for adults.

So here's my modest proposal: Let's stop calling "Mature"-rated titles such as "Grand Theft Auto" and "Assassin's Creed" "video games" altogether. Instead, let's label them "interactive entertainment."

Then we could reserve the term "video game" for light, general audience fare such as "Pokemon" or "Angry Birds."

Comic books for adult audiences have been rebranded "graphic novels." Maybe the same thing could happen for cinematic, story-driven, adult-themed games.

Separated from the "kids stuff" stereotype, games could be taken more seriously as an art form, and we'd be less quick to blame them for moral decay.

Now you'll have to excuse me, I better run this idea by Mario and Luigi.

Emanuel plans to push new regulations despite possible legal fight

Chicago Tribune

In a city bloodied by unceasing gun violence, Mayor Emanuel is seeking to shift the conversation on crime to an area he can do something about: new city firearm regulations.

The mayor said Thursday he will introduce new gun rules to the City Council next week. He refused to discuss the specifics of his proposal, however, and it's unclear how much more he can do via local gun legislation to curb the shootings.

Since the Sandy Hook Elementary School slayings in Connecticut, Emanuel has repeatedly spoken about the need for a state and federal assault weapons ban, stronger controls on gun registration and requirements for reporting lost or stolen guns. But Chicago ordinances already ban semi-automatic assault weapons, order gun owners to report when their weapons are lost, stolen or transferred to another owner, and require residents who own firearms to register them.

On Thursday, Emanuel was asked about the Illinois General Assembly's recent failure to pass an assault weapons ban. The mayor positioned himself as a get-tough leader prepared to act while lawmakers in Springfield and Washington dawdle.

"Waiting is not a strong suit of mine," Emanuel said. "First of all, I believe there's, I know there's a majority in the state, an overwhelming majority in the city for a ban on assault weapons, clips, and comprehensive background checks on all sales, wherever they take place, wherever the location may be.

"I can do certain things in the city," Emanuel added during a North Side news conference about after-school programs at libraries. "We're going to take those steps and do that."

Chicago banned handguns for decades until the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the city's ban in 2010.

Both during and after the ban, handguns have remained at the root of much of the violence plaguing the city.

WHAT'S NEXT?

Mayor Emanuel could face a costly legal challenge from gun rights advocates over any ordinance that further restricts gun ownership. Last month, the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned a long-standing state ban on carrying concealed weapons. The mayor acknowledged the possibility of a court fight over his upcoming plan.

NFL star had brain disease

Seau

Junior Seau, the 12-time Pro Bowl linebacker who killed himself last year, suffered from the same debilitating brain disease diagnosed in at least two other former NFL defensive players who also committed suicide, a study released Thursday revealed.

Seau, 43, died in May after shooting himself in the chest at his beachfront house in his hometown of Oceanside, Calif. He played mostly for the San Diego Chargers during his 20-year NFL career.

A study of Seau's brain by a team of independent researchers found he suffered from chronic traumatic encephalopathy, or CTE, likely brought on by two decades of blows to the head as a football player, according to the report.

CTE can be diagnosed only after death.

Tissue from his brain was sent to the National Institutes of Health for analysis in July, at the request of Seau's family, amid growing concern over the long-term effects of football-related head injuries.

"The final diagnosis was findings consistent with chronic traumatic encephalopathy," said Dr. Russell Lonser, the lead researcher on the case. Lonser is chairman of the Department of Neurological Surgery at Ohio State University and led the study of Seau's brain while he was at NIH.

It was unclear what effect the study would have on a class action suit brought by several thousand former NFL players who claim the league has not done enough to protect players from brain injuries. The NFL said the result of the examination of Seau's brain underscored "the recognized need for additional research to accelerate a fuller understanding of CTE."

Patients with CTE may display symptoms "such as impulsivity, forgetfulness, depression, [and] sometimes suicidal ideation," Lonser said in the report.

Should U.S. release bin Laden photos?

8 WASHINGTON A federal appeals court panel is considering whether photos of Osama bin Laden's body should be released.

Judicial Watch, a conservative legal group, argued Thursday before a three-judge panel that the Freedom of Information Act requires the government to release the pictures or better explain why the release of specific images would damage national security.

The U.S. Court of Appeals judges did not say how soon they may rule.

Judicial Watch attorney Michael Bekesha said government records indicate there are 52 images of bin Laden taken just after his death or when his body was aboard the USS Carl Vinson and then buried at sea. During the court hearing, Bekesha argued the shots of the burial at sea could be released without fear of harming national security, but he did not make that claim about the more gruesome images taken just after bin Laden was shot at his compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan.

The government has said that releasing the pictures could lead to violence against Americans.

Busting benefits myths

If you're the superstitious type, go ahead and skip this column. I'd hate to jinx you out of a job. Don't walk under any ladders on your way out!

OK, now that the knock-on-wood crowd is out of here, let's talk about the very real possibility that you'll lose your job someday. Just in case, let's clear up some misconceptions about unemployment benefits.

nothing.

MYTH: Everyone is entitled to it.

FACT: Not quite. You can collect unemployment benefits only if you were laid off from your job, not if you were fired or quit or had to leave because you burned the building down. You must be willing and able to work, i.e. actively looking for a job.

MYTH: It lasts until you find a job.

FACT: If you apply for Illinois unemployment in 2013, your state benefits run out after 26 weeks (if you filed your initial claim in 2012, you get 25). After that, you might qualify for Extended Unemployment Compensation from the federal government.

MYTH: I need to make those benefit weeks last for the rest of my life. If I find a job after they run out, and then get laid off from THAT job, I get FACT: Nope. You have one year to use up your benefits, and the clock starts on the day you apply. If you're still eligible for unemployment after that year, you can claim benefits again.

MYTH: Unemployment checks will cover all my former salary.

FACT: Nope. Benefits are generally capped at 47 percent of your full salary, to a point. The maximum an individual claimant can get every week is $413.

MYTH: Unemployment money comes straight from the government/my coworkers/my paycheck/my boss.

FACT: Ehhhhh, this is complicated. The government distributes the money, on the state and federal level. But the government gets that money from businesses' contributions. And those contributions come from money that might have gone to your salary instead. "It is a contribution that workers do not see taken out of their check, but it is fair to say that it is paid for by the businesses and taken out of the individual's check," said Greg Rivara, spokesman for the Illinois Dept. of Employment Security.

MYTH: I can just sit back and watch the checks roll in.

FACT: Every two weeks you have to certify that you are actively looking for a job. You also have to register at www.illinoisjoblink.com, and Rivara recommends keeping records of your job search.

MYTH: I don't have to pay taxes on unemployment.

FACT: Sorry. You owe the IRS just like everyone else does.

If pro riders' 'partners' get mean, sleeping on the couch is the least of their worries

By Matt Lindner

FOR REDEYE

While some people might get in the pen with a 2,000-pound enraged bull and see the physical manifestation of their worst childhood nightmares, Chase Outlaw sees something different.

"It's just a dancing partner," the 20-year-old professional bull rider said.

Come again?

"It's just like dancing," he reiterated. "You've gotta stay with them step for step. You don't want to step on her toes and you don't want her stepping on yours, so y'all stay in tune with each other."

Outlaw rides into Rosemont this weekend as part of the Professional Bull Riders' Chicago Invitational. His current profession is about all he's ever known, having started riding calves at age 4.

"My dad used to ride bulls," he said. "He told me to get on in and hang the hell on, don't let go. It's worked out pretty good so far."

That it has. The Hamburg, Ark., native enters this event as the seventh-ranked rider on tour, and he has amassed more than $170,000 in winnings. It's success Outlaw attributes largely to his ability to read his dance partners.

"It's just reaction and timing," he said.

"Knowing how a bull bucks and being on his back, you won't know that feeling until he's between your legs. The way he's bucking and the way he reacts, it's just something different every time and it's an awesome feeling."

It's also his first time riding on tour in Chicago, though that's something he seems unimpressed about when asked.

"It don't matter if I'm riding in my hometown or riding in Vegas or in Chicago, I've gotta have the same mindset as I would anywhere else knowing I'm going to win," he said.

And while Outlaw's career is just beginning, fellow PBR athlete Luke Snyder acknowledges that his own bull-riding days are numbered.

"This sport can end at any minute," the Raymore, Mo., native said. "I'm 30 years old, so that's getting up there in this sport. I'm definitely towards the end of my career. I still love it and I still have a passion for it. The day I don't have that any more is the day that I'll hang it up."

Snyder, who enters this weekend ranked 10th on tour, has been riding bulls professionally for 13 years. He said he got into riding in much the same way kids get into any other sport.

"For the most part, all of us start really young," he said. "We go to school that teaches us how to do it just like a kid would go to football camp or baseball camp. They teach us all the ins and outs, the whole nine yards."

Both men have been riding bulls for as long as they can remember, and both say they still get nervous before each ride. Of course, that's a good thing in their profession.

"The minute you get on one of these animals and don't think that they can hurt you, that's usually when you start getting hurt," Snyder said.

And the danger is no joke.

According to a 2011 study by the University of Calgary in Alberta, 16 rodeo athletes died from chest injuries between 1989 and 2009. A representative of the PBR Tour said there have been no rider deaths in its events in at least the past five years. All riders must wear a protective vest, and many choose to wear a helmet.

"The nerves only work in your favor, because if you get nervous, it's gonna make you hold on a little bit tighter and stay on top of him instead of being on the ground right beside him," Outlaw said.

MATT LINDNER IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

HOW IT'S DONE

There are 35 riders competing in the Chicago PBR event, and the winner takes home $30,000. Here are the rules, according to pbr.com.

A qualified ride is 8 seconds. The clock starts when the bull's shoulder or flank breaks the plane of the gate. It ends when the rider's hand comes out of the rope, the rider touches the ground or the rider's free arm touches the bull. A successful ride will earn 0-100 points. Scores of 90 or above are considered outstanding. Four judges rate each rider and each bull. They judge each rider for his control, and each bull for the difficulty it musters. For a two-day event, riders compete in as many as four rounds. The overall winner is the rider with the highest combined score on all his bulls.

ROUGH RIDER

In 13 years of riding bulls for a living, Luke Snyder has seen more than his share of hospital rooms. "You do this sport long enough, you're gonna take your licks," said Snyder, who has suffered 10 concussions and needed 50 stitches in his career. So why would anyone want to do a job where serious injury is virtually inevitable? "It's the same reason why anybody does an extreme sport," Snyder said. "If it was really easy, everyone would do it." We'll take his word for it. Here's are the "licks" he's taken as a pro, not including the arm he broke in practice when he was 13. ML

1 After four ejections last time, what can we expect from Bulls-Knicks on Friday?

Certainly not a mellow, enn, Melo game.

Carmelo Anthony goes on a cereal killing spree. Cheerio, mate.

My client declines to answer this question on grounds the Blackhawks are back.

John Starks will attempt to dunk over Jo. He will fail.

Carmelo will confront Carlos boozier ... just wanting to talk.

2 Jay Cutler is so excited for the Bears' coaching search because ...

... now Lovie's going to pack his things and go. Tainted Lovie.

... because it opens the door for his lifelong mentor, Grumpy Cat.

... he'll get to shrug through an entirely new offense.

... he gets a new euchre partner. Lovie constantly got set and never went alone.

... there is a chance he could have a non-mummy for a coach.

3 The Hawks open the season at the defending champion Kings. Start the trash talk.

Eh, in L.A., it's more faux than foe.

You're from L.A.—your fans wouldn't recognize a Cup unless it had a Starbucks logo on it.

"YOUR WIFE'S A..." Oh, just go watch "Slap Shot."

Let's all agree that Phoenix goalie Mike Smith is a horrible human being.

Hey! How did that trade for Gretzky 25 years ago work out? Thought so!

4 What should we expect from the NFL playoffs this weekend?

The Bears hibernating.

Brent Musburger's special report on the bitter rivalry between Ashley Manning and Gisele Bundchen.

Phil Emery will be interviewing each team's offensive coordinator during halftime.

Two blowouts, one upset and far too little Katherine Webb.

Home teams win across the board.

5 Who was the biggest snub from the Baseball Hall of Fame this year?

Sosa. He could have used a little help getting there.

I would say Mark McGwire is by far the biggest, but that's probably because of the creatine.

The only player from the 19th century to use steroids, Horatio K. Snub.

The scrappiest scrapper that ever scrapped a scrap, Craig Scrappio.

Easy. Jack Morris.

In case you were wondering, it really is Sammy Sosa, the real Sammy Sosa, on social media.

Rebecca Polihronis, marketing manager for Injex 21, a company that makes needle-free technology for drugs that are injected, confirmed Thursday that the former Cubs star has joined the image-sharing site Pinterest. Sosa is the CEO of Injex 21.

"We're learning social media; we're not pros at it yet, but we're working on it," she said, also confirming that Twitter user @TheRealMr609, though unverified by the site, is authentic. She added that she and Sosa manage the Twitter account.

The account appears to have been created in October, and on Thursday deadspin.com pointed out its existence. Sosa quickly picked up hundreds of followers in a matter of hours. There hasn't been much activity on Sosa's Pinterest, with the vast majority of the images shared depicting him in various poses in three outfits. All have the same caption, though:

"Sammy Sosa. Yes, I'm the real Sammy Sosa, and this is my Pinterest."

After picking three of four NFL wild card games correctly last week, I'm feeling confident going into the divisional round. Here now, my picks:

Baltimore at Denver

3:30 p.m. Saturday, CBS

Ray Lewis howls almost as well as I do. But I can't pick against Peyton Manning on his home turf. Broncos 30, Ravens 23

Green Bay at San Francisco

7 p.m. Saturday, Fox

If the Packers are really an underdog, as Vegas suggests, then I'm the Cheshire Cat. Packers 27, 49ers 16

Seattle at Atlanta

noon Sunday, Fox

Why do I love this game? Because birds fascinate me. Though that has nothing to do with my pick. Falcons 34, Seahawks 20

Houston at New England

3:30 p.m. Sunday, CBS

Gisele, er, Tom Brady isn't going anywhere just yet. At least I hope not. Patriots 33, Texans 23

THE DIGIT

Paul McGee
REDEYE FILE

Avondale's Yusho was one of 2012's most-loved restaurants, thanks in no small part to beverage director Alex Bachman's cocktails, which will take center stage at Logan Square's Billy Sunday (3143 W. Logan Blvd.). The 50-seat bar will be open by the end of January and pour more than a dozen cocktails—two of which will be carbonated tonics on draft—as well as food from former G.E.B. chef John Vermiglio dubbed “Midwest supper club.” Three Dots and a Dash, the long-awaited Paul McGee-led tiki bar below Bub City (435 N. Clark St.), is expected to open by late February. In June or July, the Mercadito Hospitality crew and Tavernita chef Ryan Poli hope to debut Tippling Hall (646 N. Franklin St.), serving late-night comfort food and serious cocktails courtesy of their resident mixologists, the Tippling Brothers.

DOUGHNUTS

The mastermind behind Nightwood's legendary bacon-butterscotch doughnuts, Enoch Simpson, strikes out on his own with Endgrain (1851 W. Addison St.). Opening in Roscoe Village in February, it'll serve his addictive signature pastries in the morning and dinner by night. In River North, look for Firecakes (68 W. Hubbard St.) to open just a few blocks away from foodie mecca The Doughnut Vault in late January from Jonathan Fox, owner of La Madia pizzeria.

PIZZA

Hungry for a slice of something new? Brooklyn-style pizzeria Flour & Stone (355 E. Ohio St.) is due to open in Streeterville in late January, with plenty of eat-in space plus delivery kicking in a month later. In Lincoln Park, Homeslice (938 W. Webster Ave.) is due to open in early February, specializing in hand-tossed pies that defy categorization. “It's definitely not Chicago-style,” co-owner Josh Iachelli said. “It has a thinner base and a fluffy outer crust.” If all that sounds tasty, wait until you hear what the owners of Stout Barrel House & Galley have brewing in the West Loop for a June debut: A yet-unnamed pizzeria and brewery in a former mechanic's shop with a retractable roof-covered patio and wood-fired oven for baking Neapolitan-style pies.

2013
DINING & DRINKING
PREVIEW

A year's worth of restaurants, bars, clubs and breweries to look forward to in 2013

By Lisa Arnett and Kate Bernot | REDEYE

That cute cat calendar you picked up in the office holiday gift exchange? It's time to put it to use. We've only reached the second week of 2013, but there already are months of restaurant, bar and club openings to keep on your radar. Of course, the city's going to greet a slew of fresh burger, beer and pizza spots this year, but there's also an Italian tavern with a “Top Chef” favorite at the helm, a playful tiki bar and a fine-dining Chinese restaurant to anticipate. From long-awaited hot spots to small neighborhood newcomers, meet the dining and drinking arrivals that are going to keep Chicago buzzing this year. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM; KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATDRINK

BEER

Craft beer continues to explode with the arrival of Dryhop (3155 N. Broadway), a Lakeview brewpub due to open by March. Brewer Brent Dubovick plans to offer seven beers on tap—two seasonals, four flagship beers and one rotating collaboration with another brewery—alongside beer-friendly small plates. Beverly also will welcome a new neighborhood brewpub when Horse Thief Brewing (10426 S. Western Ave.) begins pouring in early February. Chef and owner Neil Byers plans a menu of burgers and barbecue to complement five house-made beers, which stick to classic styles such as kolsch, stout and pale ale. Two new breweries, Off Color (3925 W. Dickens Ave.), on the border of Logan Square and Hermosa, and Ravenswood's Begyle (1800 W. Cuyler Ave.), also will bring their brews to the masses this spring when retail spaces open adjacent to the breweries.

Fabio Viviani

ITALIAN

Known for his charming Italian accent and for waxing philosophical about gnocchi, "Top Chef" fan favorite Fabio Viviani has teamed up with Bull & Bear and Public House owners Luke Stoioff and David Rekhson (of newly named Dineamic Group) to open Siena Tavern (51 W. Kinzie St.). Come mid-February, you'll be able to taste his gnocchi (with pancetta, fried sage and truffle cream) along with lasagna inspired by his mother's recipe and a bar dedicated to churning out pizza and crudo. Any lingering cravings surely will be squashed when the Italian market/restaurant/playland that is Eataly takes over the space vacated by ESPN Zone (43 E. Ohio St.).

CLUBS

Three nightlife heavyweights are getting a revamp this year: The Underground and Excalibur in River North will both relaunch—the latter as a new club called The Castle (632 N. Dearborn St.)—while Bucktown's Green Dolphin Street will resurface as Dolphin on Jan. 18. The Castle will debut Feb. 22 with a new sound and video system and special effects throughout the rooms that formerly housed both Excalibur and neighboring club Vision.

The Underground (56 W. Illinois St.) will keep its name, but plans to upgrade its interior and reopen sometime this winter. Dolphin's (2200 N. Ashland Ave.) makeover includes new lighting and sound systems and a renewed focus on global house music.

BURGERS

Denver-based burger chain Smashburger hopes to infuse some local flavor into its first Chicago location opening this spring in Lincoln Park (2031 N. Clybourn Ave.) with Goose Island beer and burgers such as the Windy City topped with spicy mustard, fried onions and cheddar on a pretzel bun. Further north, cult-favorite fast-food spot Sonic also is planning its first city location at Kenmore and Wilson in Uptown and could be serving Super Sonic double cheeseburgers as early as late summer. And, of course, expect burgermania to ensue when Avondale legend Kuma's Corner opens spinoff Kuma's Too in the space that recently housed fellow burger shop The Counter (666 W. Diversey Pkwy.).

CHICKEN

Signaling a sudden obsession with the original white meat, a trio of chefs are set to open chicken-centric restaurants this year, including the folks behind underground supper club Sunday Dinner. That project, Honey Butter Fried Chicken (3361 N. Elston Ave.), will introduce Avondale to a menu of crispy chicken slathered in a signature honey butter, plus seasonal sides and desserts. Nellcote chef Jared Van Camp also has announced a chicken sandwich shop called Leghorn, and Girl & The Goat's Stephanie Izard has poultry plans as well, though neither has announced an opening date or location.

ASIAN

Former Japonais chef Gene Kato is channeling the Japanese art of robata grilling at Sumi Robata Bar (702 N. Wells St.), due to open any day now in River North along with a basement lounge called Charcoal Bar. In the same neighborhood, look for fine-dining Chinese restaurant Lao 18 (18 W. Hubbard St.) coming soon from Chinatown powerhouse Tony Hu. Meanwhile, former Saigon Sisters chef Matt Eversman is readying dishes such as crab with corn, potato and coconut for his East Asian-inspired restaurant Oon (802 W. Randolph St.), projected to open in February in the West Loop.

MEXICAN

Billy Dec and the Rockit Ranch crew expand their nightlife empire in River North with Ay Chiwowa (311 W. Chicago Ave.), a taqueria and tavern set to open this winter for weekends only (Thursday through Sunday) with plans to be open daily by summer. Modern tacos and soups will arrive in Wicker Park in March courtesy of Takito Kitchen (2013 W. Division St.). In the South Loop, look for Chica Loca (1010 S. Delano Court), a 200-seat Mexican restaurant, to fire up its stoves this summer to satisfy pre-movie diners at nearby Showplace Icon Theatre.

2013 DINING & DRINKING PREVIEW

Hyde Park heats up

By Lisa Arnett and Kate Bernot

REDEYE

From the killer sandwiches at Zaleski & Horvath to the friendly bartenders at The Cove Lounge, Hyde Park has plenty to brag about in the bar and restaurant department. But with three high-profile projects in the works for 2013, it's going to be a big year for this South Side neighborhood anchored by the University of Chicago campus.

Empty Bottle and Longman & Eagle owner Bruce Finkelman has teamed up with Craig Golden (of Evanston music venue Space) to open The Promontory (1539 E. 53rd St.) this winter. "We're hoping to bring a neighborhood spot to a great historic neighborhood," said Finkelman. Longman chef Jared Wentworth is behind fare they're calling "modern hearth cooking" and, like Empty Bottle and Space, there will be live music.

Former Charlie Trotter's chef Matthias Merges, who had a breakout turn last year with Yusho, is opening two restaurants in Hyde Park. "I think it was underserved for a long time," he said. "It's going to turn into a destination for people who are downtown. Instead of going to the North Side, maybe they'll come to the South Side now."

Soft-serve at Yusho
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE FILE

One project is a smaller sibling to Yusho and will focus on the restaurant's popular noodles, steamed buns and soft-serve and open this fall at 1466 E. 53rd St. In a larger 100-seat space at 1301 E. 53rd St., Merges is planning a what he calls "a more polished restaurant that's based off of southern France and northern Italy," opening by early summer.

MORE 2013 OPENINGS

» In late February or early March, Naha chef Carrie Nahabedian plans to open Brindille (534 N. Clark St.). "It's going to be very intimate, [a] jewel box. A luxuriously Parisian space," she said. "Don't think bistro, brasserie, anything like that. This is going to be a modern grill room, so to speak."

» Little Market Brasserie (10 E. Delaware Place) is set for a grand opening Jan. 18.

» The team behind RPM Italian—Molly, RJ and Jerrod Melman as well as chef Doug Psaltis and celebrity couple Bill and Giuliana Rancic—are at it again with RPM Steak (60 W. Kinzie St.), opening in fall or winter.

» With gigs at Schwa and New York's Momofuku Ko under his belt, chef Jonathan Ory

» Former Graham Elliot chef Andrew Brochu is heading up The Monarch (1745 W. North Ave.), due to open Friday in the former Uberstein space in Wicker Park.

» Vie chef de cuisine Nathan Sears and former Vie colleague Adam Hebert are hoping to open their Bavarian-style beer hall, The Radler, in Logan Square in late summer or early fall.

» We're anxious to see what owners (and brothers) Nader, Fadi and Rafid Hindo of Hubbard Partners along with operating partner Jason Freiman (Bangers & Lace, The Anthem, Lumen) have cooking at 111 W. Hubbard St. Details are under wraps, but Nader has said that both food and drinks will be central.

plans to open Bad Wolf Coffee (3422 N. Lincoln Ave.) in early spring. Expect Counter Culture coffee and pastries such as white chocolate babka with star anise and ginger.

» Pre-Prohibition-style cocktails are the focus at Prohibit (116 W. Hubbard St.), a sultry lounge from the owners of NV opening Jan. 25.

Paul Thomas Anderson and "The Master" missing out on nods for best picture, best director and best original screenplay.
What the Academy's saying: Come on, we nominated all of your stars. We didn't get the movie. What do you want from us?

Joaquin Phoenix (as well as more-assured nominees Philip Seymour Hoffman and Amy Adams) recognized for "The Master."
What the Academy's saying: You said you don't care about the Oscars, but we're big enough to know that all that matters is the work. Well, that's not always the case, but we're going with it this time because you are a fascinating mess in this movie.

Quvenzhané Wallis replicates the fiery spirit of her "Beasts" character Hushpuppy in becoming the youngest-ever best actress nominee.
What the Academy's saying: The Golden Globes were wrong. Several others were wrong. For an actor of any age and experience, your performance is unforgettable. Welcome to the big show.

Academy raises eyebrows with some 2013 Oscar noms

As always, the Oscar nominations have created a roller coaster of emotion. Shock! Relief! Fury! We should not get so worked up about this.

Really, though, the nods for the 2013 Academy Awards had more big surprises than usual—or maybe they were just bigger surprises than usual. Here's a rundown of those shockers in key categories, plus the notices that made me happy and sad, along with the statement the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences seems to be making with all of them.

The 85th Academy Awards will be revealed Feb. 24 on ABC, hosted by Seth MacFarlane.

Benh Zeitlin snags a nomination for the indie "Beasts of the Southern Wild."
What the Academy's saying: We don't care how many people are surprised. Your movie is a remarkable achievement. Kudos.

Kathryn Bigelow, who won best director for "The Hurt Locker," misses what many thought to be a guaranteed (and much-deserved) nomination for "Zero Dark Thirty."
What the Academy's saying: We know you're good with stories about terrorism. What else ya got?

Best director nominee
shoo-in

Ben Affleck ("Argo") was probably holding a bottle of champagne, but despite the movie's best picture nomination, the fizz tastes a little less fizzy for the snubbed director.

What the Academy's saying: For a while, "Argo" was cool. Then we were more excited about other movies, and the well-executed tension couldn't compensate for its overdone elements, which felt more like fiction than a true story.

"ParaNorman" lands a best animated feature nomination, and "Rise of the Guardians" doesn't.

What the Academy's saying: Not always, but sometimes we really do understand quality. You're welcome!

Christoph Waltz

takes the "Django Unchained" best supporting actor nod instead of Leonardo DiCaprio.

What the Academy's saying: We know the nod for Alan Arkin ("Argo") is goofy, so we'll make sure to get the "Django" pick right. Waltz has a leading role, but he's far more nuanced than DiCaprio. Take that, advance buzz!

Jacki Weaver slides into the tough-to-predict best supporting actress race.

What the Academy's saying: We could have gone with someone new, like Samantha Barks for "Les Misérables," or someone previously unheralded, like Ann Dowd for "Compliance." It was easier to just write Weaver because she was nominated before ("Animal Kingdom") and we had already written "Silver Linings Playbook" in every other possible category.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Alan Arkin, "Argo"
Christoph Waltz, "Django Unchained"
Robert De Niro, "Silver Linings Playbook"
Philip Seymour Hoffman, "The Master"
Tommy Lee Jones, "Lincoln"

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Amy Adams, "The Master"
Sally Field, "Lincoln"
Anne Hathaway, "Les Misérables"
Helen Hunt, "The Sessions"
Jacki Weaver, "Silver Linings Playbook"

Matthew McConaughey is overlooked in the best supporting actor field for "Magic Mike."

What the Academy's saying: Your abs were distracting. We should've revisited this and seen how good your work was in this unexpectedly great movie, but there were too many obvious "Oscar" movies and we ran out of time.

The L.A. cops of 'Gangster Squad'

Been there, shot that

This true story of morally questionable, mid-20th century L.A. cops and their efforts to rid the city of organized crime and corruption contains so much intrigue, it's a wonder no one's done it before.

Oops, they have. Sixteen years after Curtis Hanson's exceptional "L.A. Confidential," the silly, redundant "Gangster Squad" attempts to mine the period for violent pizzazz and romantic va-va-voom. Its flair is all posturing, its hints of style nothing but hollow tricks.

That's because director Ruben Fleischer ("Zombieland," "30 Minutes or Less") seems flustered by genre conventions. Well, and because of the dreadful script by first-time feature writer Will Beall, adapting Paul Lieberman's book, which chronicles Sgt. John O'Mara (Josh Brolin) and his "Ocean's Eleven"-style crew recruited to drive vicious crime boss Mickey Cohen (Sean Penn) out of town. Helping select the gangster squad, who actually do call themselves that, is O'Mara's wife Connie (Mireille Enos), who says things like, "You need someone with brains to balance the brawn" after already advising her veteran husband, "The war is over; stop fighting."

Reunited from "Crazy Stupid Love,"

!!! Gangster Squad
R

Ryan Gosling (as Jerry, a cop who carelessly cozies up to Mickey Cohen's gal Grace and only wants to fight after his favorite shoe-shine boy gets shot) and Emma Stone (as Grace) engage in playful banter that leads only to an underwritten relationship. Stone's a wonderful, likable actress but she has neither the presence nor the curves to play the bombshell. The crass, finesse-free "Gangster Squad" spends more time on the squad (which includes Anthony Mackie, Giovanni Ribisi, Michael Pena and Robert Patrick) working their case without any riveting sequences or complicated moral wrinkles to iron out. When Ribisi's character questions what they're doing, John says it's the only way they can do it, and that's that. The movie merely delivers several opening bits of brutality followed by ordinary action that makes you want to go back and re-watch "The Untouchables" or "L.A. Confidential" or "Goodfellas."

Reminder: "Gangster Squad" was originally set for a September release, but following the movie theater tragedy in Aurora, Colo., Warner Bros. pulled the film's trailer—which featured a shooting in a movie theater—while also postponing the film's release and cutting that scene altogether. That was the right move, but almost everything else about the film came out wrong.

Bien or tres bien?

Theoretically all movies are subjective, but I suspect feelings about Cannes' top prizewinner "Amour" will be a particular matter of taste.

There's no doubt that it's an intimate tale of devotion from Michael Haneke ("Funny Games," "Cache"), a filmmaker known for patience but not edge-less restraint. Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and his wife, Anne (Emmanuelle Riva), both retired music teachers in their 80s, live a comfortable life in Paris. Then all of a sudden, like the attempted burglary on their apartment, Anne's mind is invaded. She seems to black out, then snap out of it. Soon, after his wife officially has had a stroke and an operation has failed, Georges begins transitioning, with hired help, into continuous care of a woman who is paralyzed on her right side and frequently cannot speak coherently.

The performances—including Isabelle Huppert as Georges' and Anne's daughter, who claims hearing them making love when she was a kid was reassuring—are nothing short of heartbreaking. Riva deserves her best actress Oscar nod.

Amour

"Amour" often looks and hurts like seeing real lives in real time. Is that enough? Honesty gradually becomes simplicity as the film's reality outweighs its insight. Haneke refuses to look away from the truth and indignities of aging but doesn't quite uncover new ground. It's as agonizing as but less rewarding than "Away From Her."

He does capture the character of Georges: a husband up for it all, be it feeding or diaper-changing, doing his best to suppress frustration and fear.

The most chilling question of this slow drama might be whether, faced with the end, two people who have given their lives to each other ultimately act in the interest of themselves or their better halves.

GOLDEN GLOBES

Predicting the 2013 movie winners before Sunday's awards

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

No matter who wins or loses, the 2013 Golden Globe Awards ceremony obviously will be awesome because Tiny Fey and Amy Poehler are hosting. That should be enough to make even the most awards show-averse movie/TV fans tune in at 7 p.m. Sunday on NBC. Yes, there will probably be plenty of frustrating developments once the winners are announced, but I'm trying to stay positive here, people. MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM | @MATTPAIS

BEST ACTRESS, DRAMA

Nominees:

- » Jessica Chastain, "Zero Dark Thirty"
- » Marion Cotillard, "Rust and Bone"
- » Helen Mirren, "Hitchcock"
- » Naomi Watts, "The Impossible"
- » Rachel Weisz, "The Deep Blue Sea"

My vote: Watts. The movie errs in not paying more attention to people who actually live in Thailand, but regardless, "The Impossible" is often terrifying and powerful, and Watts' performance makes you believe she's really living through the horror on screen.

Who will actually win: Chastain. It's a subtle part that requires incredibly minute adjustments throughout, but the push for "Zero Dark Thirty" will be enough to grant Chastain the big-time attention.

BEST ACTRESS, MUSICAL OR COMEDY

Nominees:

- » Emily Blunt, "Salmon Fishing in the Yemen"
- » Judi Dench, "The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel"
- » Jennifer Lawrence, "Silver Linings Playbook"
- » Maggie Smith, "Quartet"
- » Meryl Streep, "Hope Springs"

My vote: Lawrence. She's extraordinary in "Silver Linings Playbook"—wounded, exciting, gorgeous & raw.

Who will actually win: Lawrence. It's a no-brainer.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Nominees:

- » Amy Adams, "The Master"
- » Sally Field, "Lincoln"
- » Anne Hathaway, "Les Misérables"
- » Helen Hunt, "The Sessions"
- » Nicole Kidman, "The Paperboy"

My vote: Adams. In each scene her contributions are major even when her participation is minor.

Who will actually win: Hathaway. This award was won months ago, despite Hathaway's combination of impressive, highly emotive singing and over-acting.

'Zero Dark Thirty'

BEST PICTURE, DRAMA

Nominees:

- » "Argo"
- » "Django Unchained"
- » "Life of Pi"
- » "Lincoln"
- » "Zero Dark Thirty"

My vote: "Zero Dark Thirty." Easily the best movie on this list.

Who will actually win: "Zero Dark Thirty." It's got momentum and controversy and, as mentioned, quality.

BEST PICTURE, MUSICAL OR COMEDY

Nominees:

- » "The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel"
- » "Les Misérables"
- » "Moonrise Kingdom"
- » "Salmon Fishing in the Yemen"
- » "Silver Linings Playbook"

My vote: "Moonrise Kingdom." Wes Anderson's latest returns to the usual Anderson well but does so without feeling like a retread.

Who will actually win: "Les Misérables." The very well-done musical is the most "award-worthy" movie here, and even recent backlash won't sink it.

BEST ACTOR, DRAMA

Nominees:

- » Daniel Day-Lewis, "Lincoln"
- » Richard Gere, "Arbitrage"
- » John Hawkes, "The Sessions"
- » Joaquin Phoenix, "The Master"
- » Denzel Washington, "Flight"

My vote: Phoenix. The movie is complicated and mysterious, as is Phoenix's itchy turn as Freddie Quell, the man searching for guidance and yet unable to be tamed.

Who will actually win: Day-Lewis. The guy freaking looked just like Lincoln and behaved as it's easy to imagine Honest Abe did as well.

BEST ACTOR, MUSICAL OR COMEDY

Nominees:

- » Jack Black, "Bernie"
- » Bradley Cooper, "Silver Linings Playbook"
- » Hugh Jackman, "Les Misérables"
- » Ewan McGregor, "Salmon Fishing in the Yemen"
- » Bill Murray, "Hyde Park on Hudson"

My vote: Cooper. More than anyone else in this category, he gets inside his character's difficult experience and makes us feel like we understand where he's been and why he goes where he goes.

Who will actually win: Jackman. He makes a solid Jean Valjean, and voters will want to reward the only musical nominated.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Nominees:

- » Alan Arkin, "Argo"
- » Leonardo DiCaprio, "Django Unchained"
- » Philip Seymour Hoffman, "The Master"
- » Tommy Lee Jones, "Lincoln"
- » Christoph Waltz, "Django Unchained"

My vote: Hoffman or Waltz (even though the latter is a lead performance). Every performance in "The Master" is spectacular, and Waltz is the best thing about the overlong-but-entertaining "Django."

Who will actually win: DiCaprio. Sometimes buzz equals victory, and all the pre-release chatter may be enough.

Hannah Horvath

(Lena Dunham)

The most self-involved one. Hannah is the leader of the "Girls" pack, who seems genuinely shocked when her parents refuse to continue funding her New York existence. She's got quite a lot to learn about herself.

Season 1 high: Adam Sackler (Adam Driver) becoming her boyfriend in the back of a Bushwick cab. Giant grins all around.

Season 1 low: Oh God, so many. But the only one that really had us peering through our fingers in shame was when she really, really awkwardly hit on her boss.

Crystal ball: From what we've gleaned from the trailers, Hannah gets some medium-to-heavy stalking from Adam, makes out with some hot older dudes and runs around in a fluorescent green shirt with no bra. Get it.

Shoshanna Shapiro

(Zosia Mamet)

Slightly younger than her cousin Jessa and the other girls, Shosh is also slightly (um, a lot) less experienced in life. Sometimes it's in a really adorable way, and sometimes it's in a really "OMG, really??" way.

Season 1 high: A tie between finally losing her virginity and her quite literal high when she accidentally smoked crack thinking it was marijuana and proceeded to beat the [bleep] out of Ray Ploshansky (Alex Karpovsky) before massaging him in a "nonsexual way."

Season 1 low: Unwittingly wearing white to Jessa's surprise wedding, a crushing faux pas in Shoshanna's eyes.

Crystal ball: Shoshanna feels serious regret in the aftermath of her deflowering and resorts to witchcraft to ensure Ray is forever cursed.

It's raining 'Girls'

HBO's most polarizing 2012 show is back and ready for serious action

By Jessica Galliard and Dana Moran | REDEYE

Among the Internet hordes, it sometimes seems like only two groups exist: 1) people who love HBO's "Girls," and 2) people who love to bitch about/hate on "Girls." After a season's worth of recapping our most and least realistic moments from the show's premiere season, it's probably ridiculously obvious that we fall in the first category.

As we giddily prepare for the Season 2 premiere at 8 p.m. Sunday, take a step back with us to times long ago (aka 2012) and acquaint yourself with Season 1's most notorious faces.

Warning: Season 1 spoilers obviously abound.

THE BOYS OF 'GIRLS'

Learn more about Adam, Charlie, Ray and Elijah at redeyechicago.com.

Jessa Johansson

(Jemima Kirke)

The most, um, adventurous (and British) of the group, Jessa stormed into New York City out of the blue and rode quite the emotional roller coaster in Season 1: missed her appointment for an abortion she didn't need, lost her job as a nanny when she rebuffed her employer's advances, and married a man a few weeks after he lost his mind when she refused a 3-way with him.

Season 1 high: Sex with her ex-boyfriend while hanging out of a window and then rebuffing his post-coital kisses to prove she was "unsmotable." The guy's bowler hat is infuriating, but never mind that.

Season 1 low: Marrying that d-bag Thomas John who called her "Mary Poppins." You'll agree when you get about halfway through Season 2, we promise.

Crystal ball: In an effort to become more domestic, Jessa adopts (and then loses) three miniature-something dogs.

Marnie Michaels

(Allison Williams)

The Type-A one. With a steady boyfriend, decent apartment, cool job and great hair, Marnie seems like she'd be the most put-together one of the group. This is so not even remotely the case.

Season 1 high: Smashing cake on her own face at Jessa's surprise wedding. This is the most relaxed we saw her all season.

Season 1 low: When we looked back, Marnie really did not have a good season. Breaking up with Charlie Dattolo (Christopher Abbott) mid-reconciliation sex may be the worst of it.

Crystal ball: While her friends are on top of the world as far as dudes are concerned, Marnie finds herself sitting not-so-pretty—except for a hookup with that guy from Lonely Island.

'Shameless' a sharp, bittersweet mess

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

■ cwagner@tribune.com
■ @showpatrol

I've never been much of a fan of Frank Gallagher, the patriarch of the perpetually down-but-never-out Gallagher kids of Chicago's South Side on Showtime's "Shameless." But I love the show.

It's not that William H. Macy doesn't nail the role. Frank's a deadbeat, a drunk and anything but lovable, a smart decision that keeps the show from being overly sentimental.

Ever the narcissist, Frank sees his kids as a means to an end—that end being to score cash for cigarettes, booze or drugs. It's fun to watch Frank's misadventures when they don't involve his kids, but when he commits offenses against them I want to strangle him. His eldest daughter, Fiona (Emmy Rossum), needs to kick him to the curb permanently—like, restraining order permanently.

Shameless
8 p.m. Sunday, Showtime

In the Season 3 premiere, Frank's youngest daughter, Debbie (Emma Kenney), counts the days until he returns from one of his binges—he's got himself into a pickle he's uniquely equipped to handle thanks to old girlfriend Sheila (Joan Cusack). It's not long after he comes home that Frank's actions cause Deb to turn on him in a shocking way.

The scene is heartbreaking, and just another example of how finely modulated the tone of the series is. Exec producers Paul Abbott and John Wells deliver dark humor, a full heart and a real desire to illustrate—no matter how outlandishly—just how difficult it is for impoverished families to make ends meet.

But when your show is called "Shameless," I suppose the pressure to live up to that title weighs more heavily from season to season. When a drug lord comes calling for Fiona's boyfriend Jimmy, alias Steve (Justin Chatwin), you can almost hear the show runners demanding ever more outrageous situations.

William H. Macy on 'Shameless'
CHUCK NODEN/SHOWTIME

I won't spoil the scene, but suffice to say it didn't feel especially funny—even as gallows humor—or affecting. But so much happens so fast on "Shameless" it's easy to forget about such a misfire and move on. The show rightly remains focused on the Gallagher kids, including oldest brother Lip (Jeremy Allen White), gay West Point hopeful Ian (Cameron Monaghan) and budding sociopath Carl (Ethan Cutkosky), and their efforts to improve their situation.

But of course, all that is threatened by Frank, who makes a hasty decision after his battle with Deb that could destroy the family.

ON MY OWN

Christopher Owens splits from acclaimed indie rockers Girls

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

"Oh, you were a part of me," sings Christopher Owens near the close of his solo debut, "Lysandre." "That part of me is gone."

While it's clear Owens is singing about a girl, he could just as easily be singing about Girls, the much-loved indie-rock crew he unexpectedly dissolved late last year. In that sense, it's fitting that "Lysandre" often plays like a breakup record, packed with quieter, more introspective songs and delicate, almost fragile instrumentation.

Owens, 33, even described the band's split the way some might describe the end of a romantic relationship. "We wanted to make it work, but we couldn't," said the current San Francisco resident. "Not through any fault on either side, but because it wasn't right."

In a recent phone interview, the musician discussed the difficulty of pulling the plug on Girls, his formidable pingpong skills and the one thing he hopes people understand about him.

Is there a different sense of anticipation with this album since your name is directly attached to it?

I've had that with every album, but there is a little bit of a different feeling this time. I guess it's a bit more of a personal sense of anticipation than a group one.

Do you think this is an album you could have made with Girls? Or did you have to strike out on your own?

It could have easily been a Girls album, but it does make a little bit more sense presenting it as a solo album. Really, I think almost all of them would have made more sense as solo albums. Everything ended up becoming so personal. Even the songs on the first [Girls] album are so incredibly personal that if they had been presented as a solo album it might have made a little more sense in a way.

You mention the personal nature of the songs, yet you recently told Pitchfork you feel like you and your audience are still strangers. What's one thing you wish people could understand about you that maybe they don't?

CHRISTOPHER OWENS

8 p.m. Jan. 15 at Lincoln Hall, $20

Stream at redeyechicago.com: "Here We Go"

It's very possible people do know me more than I think. I guess I think I'm just a little bit more mature and put together than I've come across over the years. As I write songs, for the rest of my life, people will continue to learn a lot about me. I'm going to change, and the only way to get the whole story is to follow the work over time.

Was it difficult to pull the plug on Girls?

It was very difficult. It took me about a year to even do it. It wasn't something I wanted to do, but I'm a lot happier now and I had a great time making this record, so I do feel like I did the right thing. It's an emotional thing to have to do. You really do want to keep working with all the same people forever.

You've posted a lot about pingpong on your Twitter feed in recent days. On a scale of one to 10, with 10 being Forrest Gump, how would you rate your skills?

[Laughs.] I'd like to say I'm an eight. I lived in Asia until I was 10 years old, so I played pingpong more than anything else. I guess I'd have to play again to know for sure, but I was very good.

TODAY IN THE YEAR ...

1770: Benjamin Franklin shipped the first rhubarb from London to America.
1982: Chicago schools were closed in the wake of a record-breaking cold the previous day, when the mercury dropped to 26 degrees below zero.
2000: Carlton Fisk, the star catcher for the White Sox for 13 years, was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame.
2003: Gov. George Ryan commuted the sentences of 167 condemned inmates, clearing death row.

It's not just a fantasy anymore—Tina Fey and Amy Poehler really are just like us. The hosting buddies explained a few rules for a Golden Globes drinking game (any time anyone thanks Harvey Weinstein, eat a meatball sub) to The Hollywood Reporter earlier this week. And like the ladies, we want you to have a little fun watching the Globes too. See how far you can get on our Golden Globes bingo card—we suspect you might do a little drinking too. Shatner Jr.

William Shatner teams with "The Big Bang Theory" star Kaley Cuoco in his newest Priceline ad campaign, with Cuoco playing the trained-in-negotiation (by monks) daughter of Shatner's Negotiator character. "Who wouldn't want to be William Shatner's daughter?" Cuoco said, according to thewrap.com. Fair question.

That's how many weeks Megan Fox lasted on Twitter. "I thought that 2013 might be the year that I finally blossomed into a social networking butterfly, but as it turns out, I still hate it," she wrote Thursday on her Facebook page.

THE VOICE

Justin Timberlake isn't bringing sexy back—he's bringing a whole new album! Well, that's what we think is happening. JT released a video Thursday in which he talks about why it's been so long since releasing his last album. The video ends with Timberlake entering a recording booth, putting on headphones and saying, "I'm ready." On JT's official website, a clock is counting down to midnight Sunday. What happens then? It's anyone's guess.

'Glee' spoiler alert?

"Glee" co-creator Ryan Murphy's tweet about an upcoming episode has fans astir: "GLEEKs... two couples getting back together by Valentine's Day. One might be preggers. Guesses?" It led to more than 2,600 retweets and much speculation on the couple in question. We're guessing Kurt's in the clear.

Hero worship

ABC has fast-tracked Joss Whedon's pilot for a possible series based on "S.H.I.E.L.D.," the Marvel comics peacekeeping agency featured in "The Avengers." Although it isn't assured to become a series, ABC entertainment chief Paul Lee said Thursday, the pilot script is "great" and "we're going to see it a lot earlier than the others."
